

I cannot comprehend why a regulatory agency or the Congress of the US would want to prohibit an over-the-air service that is a benefit to consumers and the nation, inasmuch as it has the potential to reduce traffic and pollution by alerting drivers to jams (and has also the ancillary benefit of reducing gasoline waste, reliance, and cost ).

Is our gov't so bought by and indebted to (as the charge is made) corporate interests that it is unable to legislate in the general, public interest? What do I not understand about this issue?
